ONE WOMAN DEFENDS HER FAVORITE HAIR DRESSING

While shopping the most annoying thing for me is to have someone try to sell me something "just as good" when I ask for Newbro's Hair Dressing. To be sure there are not many druggists who do this, but what few there are should know that such a policy will destroy the customer's confidence. When they try it on me I never wait for the story, simply hunt a store where they will sell me what I want.

It is absurd for anyone to say that a preparation is as good as Herpicide. I don't think they believe it themselves. Every druggist knows that there is but one genuine, original dandruff germ destroyer and that is Newbro's Herpicide.

It keeps the head free from dandruff, prevents the hair from coming out and stops itching of the scalp. Herpicide is really a wonderful remedy which does just what you want and expect it to do.

Newbro's Herpicide in 50c and $1.00 sizes is sold by all dealers who guarantee it to do all that is claimed. If you are not satisfied your money will be refunded. Applications at good barber shops.

Send 10c in postage for a sample to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R, Detroit, Mich.

Anty Drudge—"Nonsense, my dear. You get a cake of Fels-Naptha Soap. We'll get to work and put your clothes to soak in cool or lukewarm water, and we'll have your wash hung out on the line in no time. It would be too late to wash the old way, but you just try Fels-Naptha Soap."

You don't need an extra pair of hands if you use Fels-Naptha Soap. What's the use of hunting your good fortune at the end of the rainbow? The best fortune that you could find is done up in the Red and Green wrapper around a cake of Fels-Naptha Soap.

No housekeeper could ask better fortune than to have her work made easier, especially her washing. That's what Fels-Naptha Soap does. Good for house cleaning, scrubbing painted woodwork, washing dishes and for all kinds of housework.

Equally good, also, for washing fine laces and delicate fabrics. It won't hurt them nor cause the colors to run, as they often do when washed in hot water.

ACKNOWLEDGE IT.

Connellsville Has to Bow to the Inevitable—Sufferers of Endemic Nephritis Prove It.

After reading the public statement of this fellow-sufferer given below, you must come to this conclusion: A remedy which cured years ago, which has kept the kidneys in good health since, can be relied upon to perform the same work in other cases. Read this:

D. C. Stough, 155 N. Diamond St., Mt. Pleasant, Pa., says: "My back was extremely weak and lame and I did any work that required much stooping, I was in misery. The kidney secretions passed too frequently and when being voided were attended with a scalding pain. Having Don's Kidney Pills brought to my notice, I began their use and I am glad to say that they have brought about a marked improvement." (Statement given October 26, 1907.)

CONFIRMED PROOF.
On October 20, 1909 Mr. Stough added to the above: "The statement I have previously given in praise of Don's Kidney Pills still holds good and I have no objection to its continued publication. The relief I received has been lasting."

Va., in caring for the thirty-nine widows and eighty-one children dependent upon the thirty-two men killed in the mine explosion there last March.

In each instance the amounts supplied were a fund raised by the local committee and its expenditure will cover a period of three years.

A Monastic Race Course.

Sundown is the part of Idaho that all travelers see from the railway, with the grand stand backed by a fine cluster of dark pines. Among the smaller race courses none is prettier. The estate purchased by a company for the special purpose of horse racing originally belonged to a priory. All the brethren were swept away by the black death about the middle of the fourteenth century and every trace of their monastic buildings has disappeared. Only their memory now remains as a text of warning to thoughtless pleasure seekers—Westminster Gazette.

ALLIED TROOPS THAT QUICKLY WHIPPED TURKEY AND MADE SULTAN CRY ENOUGH

PEEPING INTO SPACE.

An Illustration That Shows the Vastness of the Universe.

Go dig a hole in the ground and set a post five or six feet high. Nail a stick across the top. Tie a fine string to a ring three inches in diameter and suspend it from the end of the stick. Break up a diamond—if you make the error of wearing one and centering your mind on the useless bubble rather than upon nature and her majestic laws; select a minute fragment so small that if spherical seventy-one side by side would make a row one inch long and suspend the tiny globe by means of a fine fiber of silk in the center of the ring.

Then walk away on a straight line 921 miles, turn around and look back. The ring would be invisible, and it would require the keenest eye to see the post, if indeed any could see it. Got a good telescope and you might just see the ring against the sky on a white background, but the diamond would be invisible.

Come up here, get the sixteen inch telescope, try it, and the diamond sphere could not be seen. Go get a forty or sixty inch telescope, still the diamond would not come into view.

Then get a 3,000,000 candle power electric arc searchlight and by means of a lens concentrate the light on the diamond. Then a much smaller telescope would reveal it.

Go to the giant star, Sirius, the dog star. Take a very large telescope with you, turn around and look back this way.

Then the orbit of the earth, a ring 196,000,000 miles in diameter, would appear to be as three inches in diameter viewed from 9.21 miles, and the sun as the one seventy-first of an inch in diameter.

THIS SHIP 93 YEARS OLD.

Schooner Hiram to Sail Around the Horn to San Francisco.

The schooner Hiram, with one exception the oldest vessel of American registry, will be exhibited at the Panama-Pacific exposition at San Francisco in 1915. She is to be refitted in Boston and will set sail in a short time for her long trip around the Horn.

The Hiram was built ninety-three years ago in Biddeford, Me. She has been in active service ever since she was launched. The only vessel of American registry which antedates her is the Polly, which is now 107 years old.

The Hiram was formerly owned at a Maine port, but now belongs to a Full River man.

When One Travels.

To find a novelty which may give for a "bon voyage" present is always a satisfaction, for any gift which is out of the ordinary expresses more thoughtfulness than the conventional, and hence is always more welcome and appreciated. The latest gift of this kind is a wee woven basket, or rather, hamper, decorated with a sprig of artificial flowers or fruit and holding within it a bottle of imported perfume. Some of these hampers contain a bottle of perfume and a cake of imported soap.

A Great Plant.

"What do you think will finally be selected as our national plant?" "Well, it is dollars to dimes it will be the mint."—Baltimore American.

COME AND LET US RETURN.

Isaiah v. 7-10—Nov. 10.

"We will then that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that carry into the night, till wine inflame."—Isa. 11.

TODAY'S lesson had its primary force in connection with the affairs of natural Israel in the days of the Prophet. But when we remember that Natural Israel types Christendom, we find a value to this lesson very pertinent to our time. "And He looked for judgment [justice], but beheld, oppression; for righteousness, and behold, a cry of distress." As to the national cry and the reason for it, see verse 8, which reads: "We unto them that join house to house, that lay field to field, till there be no place, that they may be placed in the midst of the earth." Here we perceive that a spirit of selfishness prevailed in Isaiah's day, as it does today; as then property was disposed to accumulate in the hands of the more successful, so it is today. As then land-lordism took possession of vast areas, neglectful of the fact that "the earth hath the Lord given unto the children of men," and not merely to a few, so is it today.

A Time of Trouble.

Divine disapproval of human hardness of heart, selfishness and neglect of poorer brethren and forgetfulness of the fact that we are all children of one blood, amenable to the laws of the same Creator, brought upon the Israelites punitive judgments. We believe that the Scriptures tell of a great "time of trouble" now impending over the world, especially over Christendom—a time particularly mentioned by St. James, saying, "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for the misery that shall come upon you." This trouble is mentioned in today's study, verse 9: "The Lord of Hosts said in my hearing, Of a truth many houses shall be desolate, even great and fair, without inhabitant." If we rightly appreciate what the Scriptures forewarn respecting times not far ahead of us, we will see that many of the great and rich will be in a sad plight in their countrywide homes, as will be some of the power in the congregate offices, for the time of trouble, it is declared, will be upon all.

Muscle, Revelry, Intoxication.

The text given us for today's lesson comes next in our study. In the days of Isaiah's prophecy many of the rich indulged in intoxicating liquors, music, revelry, etc., to their own injury as well as to the neglect of their responsibilities to God. They asked, "Am I my brother's keeper?" even as Cain asked this question. By their accumulated wealth they had more than heart could wish, while others were needy. And how about today, is it the same? We answer, Yes, and no. With many it is the same exactly, but with a considerable number of the wealthy of our day it is very different, we are glad to say. Continually we have evidence that some of the wealthy consider their possessions as a trust from the Almighty, to be used in His service, and for the sake of humanity. But alas, there are comparatively few. The majority of the rich, who the majority of the poor are selfish to the core.

When the selfish rich and the selfish poor shall join issue in a great struggle, as the Bible clearly declares they will do, then the world will see the time of trouble prophesied—"such as never was since there was a nation"—a time of trouble which Jesus declares will never be again, because following that great trouble, upon the ashes of the present civilization, Messiah will establish the Kingdom of God, for the blessing of all the families of the earth—the rich, the poor.

Thus Socialism, according to the Bible, will be the ultimate condition of the earth. Socialism, not aware of the teaching of God's Word, or if aware of it doubting it, propose to take over in the interest of all mankind the great blessings which are now in the hands of the comparatively few. Their schemes appear dangerous, impractical. To us it appears as the Scriptures indicate, that failing to accomplish their benevolent designs, Socialists will become bitter anarchists, and plunge themselves and the whole world into the most awful trouble ever known. We need the conversion of the world to a heart-harmony with God and the principles of righteousness.

Will this ever come? Ah, yes! The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it! But it cannot come through any power of ours. "Wait ye upon Me, saith the Lord, until that Day." "For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve Him with one consent." In His own time, following the great time of trouble, God will humble the world. Meantime the elect saints will be glorified, and with Messiah, constitute the long-promised Kingdom of God for the blessing of humanity.

After the Deluge.

She had just returned from her first trip to Europe and everybody was given an opportunity to know about it. One by one they gently extorted themselves, but at last she found a silent youth in a corner who proved to be an attentive listener. To him she rhapsodized on the beauty of life "abroad," and especially in England. It is difficult, however, for the most enthusiastic tourist to exist long without eliciting from an auditor some expression of wonder or applause, so she sought to break her listener's respectful silence even at the expense of losing a little time herself. "Were you ever in England?" she asked.

"Yes," he said modestly. "I was born there, and I am thirty-six years old. I lived there until I came to America three months ago. If you can tell me anything about America I should be awfully glad, as I wish to learn all I can."—New York Press.

South of the Cimarron all was desolation, and war raged unchecked from the Platte to the Pecos. Sheridan determined upon a winter campaign, although he understood well the sufferings entailed upon the troops by exposure on the open plains at that season. Yet he knew the habits of Indians; that they would expect immunity from attack and would gather in villages, subject to surprise. He, therefore, decided that the result would justify the necessary hardships involved. To this end smaller posts were abandoned, and the widely scattered soldiers ordered to central points in preparation for the contemplated movement. Devere had been deserted earlier, and Major McDonald had marched his men to Dodge, where Molly awaited his coming. Retained there on garrison duty, the two occupied a one-story, yellow stone structure fronting the parade ground. In October, orders to march reached "M" troop, Seventh Cavalry, at Fort Union, and the ragged, bronzed troopers, who all summer long had been scouting the New Mexican plains, turned their horses' heads to the northeast in hopefulness of action. They then up the deserted Santa Fe trail, past burned stations and wrecks of wagon trains, rode Sergeant Hamlin, silent and efficient, the old Confederate haversack fastened to his saddle, and his mind, in spite of all effort, recurring constantly to the girl who had gone to Dodge early in the summer. Was she still there? If so, how would she greet him now after those months of absence? The little cavalry column, dust-covered and weary, seemed fairly to creep along, as day by day he reviewed every word, every glance, which had passed between them; and at night, under the stars, he lay with head on his saddle, endeavoring to determine his course of action, both as to their possible meeting, and with regard to the following of the clue offered by the haversack. The time he had hoped for was at hand, but he could not decide the best course of action. He could only wait, and permit Fate to interfere.

Certain facts were, however, sufficiently clear, and the Sergeant faced them manfully. Not merely the fact that he was in the ranks, great as that handicap was, could have prevented an attempt at retaining the friendship of Molly McDonald. But he was in the ranks because of disgrace—hiding away from his own people, keeping aloof from his proper station in life, out of bitter shame. If he had felt thus before, he now felt it a thousand times more acutely in memory of the comradely of his early words had brought him a new gleam of hope. Never before had loneliness seemed so complete, and never before had he realized how wide was the chasm between the old and the new life. This constantly recurring memory embittered him, and made him restless. Yet out of it all, there grew a firmer determination to win back his old position in the world, to stamp out the blot through which the Confederate court-martial had condemned him. If Le Fevre were alive, he meant now to find him, face him, and compel him to speak the truth. The discovery of that haversack gave a point from which to start, and his mind centered there with a fixed purpose which obscured all else.

It was after dark when "M" troop, wearing by their long day's march across the brown grass, rode slowly up the face of the bluff, into the parade ground at Fort Dodge. The lights of the guard-house revealed the troopers' faces, while all about them gleamed the yellow lamps, as the garrison came forth to welcome their arrival. Guided by a corporal of the guard the men led their horses to the stables, and as they passed the row of officers' houses Hamlin caught a furtive glimpse in a radius of light that gave his pulses a sudden thrill. She was here—here! He had hardly dared hope for this. They would meet again; that could scarcely be avoided in such narrow quarters. But how? On what terms? He ventured the one swift glimpse at her—

Heed not to his chafin' after Miss Molly; that's why he's left her stay in this God-forsaken place so long. Well, Billy, I reckon I've told all the news, and had better move 'long."

"Hold on a minute, Sam," and Hamlin, suddenly recalled to earth, reached for the haversack hanging on the iron bedpost. "Moylan, the fellow who was killed in the coach with us, had this bag. According to Miss McDonald, he bought it here just before starting on the trip. See this inscription; those are the initials of an old acquaintance of mine I'd like to trace. Any idea where Moylan found it?"

Vasson held the bag to the light studying the letters.

"Fourth Texas—here! That your regiment?"

The Sergeant nodded, his lips tightly pressed together.

"Must hev come from Dutch Charlie's outfit," the scout went on slowly. "He picks up all that sorter truck."

"Where is that?"

"In town there, under the bluff. We'll look it up tomorrow."

CHAPTER XIV.

Under Arrest.

One by one the barracks lights went out as the tired troopers sought their beds. Hamlin extinguished his also, and only one remained burning, left for emergency near the door, which hung a faint glow over the big room. But the Sergeant's reflections kept him awake, as he sat on the foot of his bed, and stared out of the open window into the darkness. There was a little upon which to focus his eyes, a few yellow gleams along officers' row, where callers still lingered, and the glow of a fire in front of the distant guard-house, revealing occasionally the black silhouette of a passing sentinel. Few noises broke the silence, except the strains of some distant musical instrument, and a voice far away saying good-night. Once he awoke from reverie to listen to the call of the guards, as it echoed from post to post, ceasing with "All well, Number Nine," far out beyond the stables.

The familiar sound served to recall him to the reality of his position. What was the use? What business had he to dream? For months now he had kept that girl's face before him, in memory of a few hours of happiness when he had looked into her dark eyes and heard her pleasant speech. Yet from the first he had known the foolishness of it all. He was nothing to her, and could never become anything. Even if he cleared his past record and stepped out of the ranks into his old social position, the chances were she would never overlook what he had been. Her gratitude meant little, nor her passing interest in his army career. All that was the natural result of his having saved her life. He possessed no egoism which permitted him to think otherwise. Years of discipline had drilled into him a consciousness of the insupportable gulf between the private and the officer's daughter. The latter might be courteous, kindly disposed, even grateful for services rendered, but it must and there. The Major would see that it did, would resent bitterly any presumption. No, there was nothing else possible. If they met—as most they must in that contracted post—it would be on terms of a mere exchange of reminiscence, gratitude expressed by a smile and pleasant word. He could expect no more; might esteem himself fortunate, indeed, to receive even that recognition. Meanwhile he would endeavor to strike Le Fevre's trail. There were other interests in the world to consider besides Molly McDonald, and his memory drifted away to a home he had not visited in years. But thought would not concentrate there, and there arose before him, as he lay there, the face of Lieutenant Gaskins, wearing the same expression of insolent superiority as when they had parted out yonder on the Santa Fe trail.

"The cowardly little fool," he muttered bitterly under his breath, gripping the window frame. "It will require more than his money to bring her happiness, and I'll never stand for that. Lord! She's too sensible ever to love him. Good God—what's that!"

It leaped out of the black night—three flashes, followed instantly by the sharp reports. Then a fourth—his time unmistakably a musket—barked from behind officers' row. In the dark Hamlin thought he saw two black shadows running. A voice yelled excitedly: "Post Six! Post Six!"

With a single leap the Sergeant was across the sill, and dropped silently to the ground. Still blinded by the light he ran forward, jerking his revolver from the belt. As he passed the corner of the barracks the sentry dived again, the red flash cleaving the night in an instant's ghastly vividness. It revealed a woman shriveling against the yellow stone wall, lighted into ob-

The Sergeant caught the glimpse, half believing the vision a phantom of the brain he saw the face, white, frightened, agonized, as if it could not have been real. He slipped over the stone wall and half fell, but ran on, his mind in a turmoil, but certain some one was racing before him down the dark ravine. There had been a woman there! He could not quite blot that out—but not she; not Molly McDonald. It—if it were she; if he had really seen her face in the dark, if it was no dream, then what? Why, he must screen her from discovery, give her opportunity to slip away. This was the one vague, dim thought which took possession of the man. It obscured all else; it sent him blindly crashing over the edge of the ravine. He heard the sentry at his right cry hoarsely, he heard excited shouts from the open windows of the barracks; then his feet struck a man's body, and he went down headlong.

Almost at the instant the sentry was upon him, a gun-muzzle pressing him back as he attempted to rise.

"Be still, ye hell bound," was the gruff order, "or I'll blow yer to kingdom come! Sergeant of the guard, quick here! Post Number Six!"

Hamlin lay still, half stunned by the shock of his fall, yet conscious of the delay, this mistake of the sentry, would afford her ample chance for escape. He could hear men running toward them, and his eyes caught the yellow, bobbing light of a lantern. His hand reached out and touched the body over which he had fallen, feeling a military button, and the clasp of a belt—it was a soldier then who had been shot. Could she have done it? Or did she know who did? Whatever the truth might be, he would hold his tongue; let them suppose him guilty for the time being; he could establish innocence easily enough when it came to trial. These thoughts flashed through his mind swiftly; then the light of the lantern gleamed in his eyes, and he saw the faces clustered about.

"All right, Mapes," commanded the man with the light. "Let the fellow up until I get a look at him. Who the hell are you?"

"Sergeant Hamlin, Seventh Cavalry."

"Darned if it ain't. Say, what does all this mean, anyhow? Who's shot? Turn the body over, somebody. By God! It's Lieutenant Gaskins!"

Hamlin's heart seemed to leap into his throat and choke him; for an instant he felt faint, dazed, staring down into the still face ghastly under the rays of the lantern. Gaskins! Then she was concerned in the affair; he really had seen her hiding there against the wall. And the man's eyes were open, were staring in bewilderment at the faces. The Sergeant of the Guard thrust the lantern closer.

"Lift his head, some o' yer, the man's alive. Copley, get some water, an' two o' yer run for the stretcher leg it now. We'll have yer out o' here in five minutes. Lieutenant! What happened, sir? Who shot yer?"

Gaskins' dulled eyes strayed from the speaker's face until he saw Hamlin, still firmly gripped by the sentry. His lips drew back revealing his teeth, his eyes narrowing.

"That's the one," he said faintly.

"You've got him,"

One hand went to his side in a spasm of pain, and he fainted. The Sergeant laid him back limp on the grass, and stood up.

"Where is your gun, Hamlin?"

"I dropped it when I fell over the Lieutenant's body. It must be back of you."

Some one picked the weapon up, and laid it to the light, turning the chamber.

"Two shots gone, Sergeant."

"We heard three, likely the Lieutenant got in one of them. Sentry, what do you know about this?"

Mapes scratched his head, the fingers of his other hand gripping the prisoner's shoulder.

"Not so awful much," he replied, haltingly, "I don't know but he hit it. 'T was a mighty dark night, an' I never saw, nor heard, nuthin' till the shootin' begun. I was back o' officers' row, an' them pistols popped up yere, by the corner o' the barracks. I jumped an' yelled; thought I heard somebody runnin' an' lot drive. Then just as I got up yere, this fellow come leavin' 'long, an' I naturally grabbed him. That's the whole o' it."

"What have you got to say, Hamlin?"

"Nothing."

"Well, yer better. Yer in a mighty bad box, let me tell yer," answered the other's indifference. "What was the row about?"

The cavalryman stood straight, his face showing white in the glow of the lantern.

"I told you before I had nothing to say. I will talk tomorrow," he returned quietly. "I submit to arrest."

"I reckon yer will talk tomorrow, and be damn glad o' the chance. Corporal, take this fellow to the guard-house, an' stay there with him. Here comes the stretcher, an' the doctor."

Hamlin marched off silently through the black night, surrounded by a detail of the guard. It had all occurred so suddenly that he was bewildered yet, merely retaining sufficient consciousness of the circumstances to keep still. If they were assured he was guilty, then no effort would be made to trace any others connected with the affair. Why Gaskins should have identified him as the assassin was a mystery—probably it was merely the delirium of a sorely wounded man, although the fellow may have disliked him sufficiently for that kind of revenge, or have mistaken him for another in the poor light. At any rate the unexpected identification helped him to play his part, and, if the Lieutenant lived, he would later acknowledge his mistake. There was no occasion to worry; he could clear himself of the charge whenever the time came; half his company would know he was in barracks when the firing be-

Whaling has almost ceased to hold its place as one of our national industries. Though almost all of its men and ships have passed away, an illuminating description of this hazardous vocation has never been written. But fortunately it has been recorded by the best and truest of all possible methods of recording facts—the tiny negatives of animated pictures. These will be presented by Lyman H. Howe at the Soisson Theatre, Wednesday, November 13. The scenes are of absorbing interest throughout. They reveal the implements and tactics of whalers, the sighting, approach and harpooning of the whale, its frantic, convulsive struggles, its enormous size as seen alongside the vessel and finally the processes employed in dressing it for its product.

An infinite variety of scenes of Paris and its environs, including the historic palace of Versailles and a trip along the picturesque rivers of France, all presented in the varied hues and tints of nature, the burial of the Mamelou, a thrilling race between a hydroplane and a fleet of the swiftest motor boats, including the 800 horse power Ursula; the bee industry; and a ferocious lion making a frozen leap at a horse which is saved from gan. There were women out on the walk, their skirts fluttering as they waited anxiously to learn the news, but he could not determine if she was among them. Voices asked questions, but the corporal hurried him along, without making any reply. Then he was thrust roughly into a stone-lined cell, and left alone. Outside in the corridor two guards were stationed. Hamlin sat down on the iron bed, dazed by the silence, endeavoring to collect his thoughts. The nearest guard, leaning on his gun, watched carefully.

HE DIDN'T LIKE WHIGS.

And He Had No Use For Portraits of Henry Clay.

In Daviess county, Ky., at the time when Henry Clay was running for the presidency against General Jackson, there lived a plain, industrious farmer. He was an ardent politician, noted for his hostility to Clay and his party. But his interest in politics did not make him indifferent to his wife's happiness. While in town one day he thought he would surprise the good woman by presenting her with a set of new dishes. He selected an attractive pattern, and as he was in a hurry did not examine the dishes closely, but had them packed and placed in his wagon.

His wife was delighted with the gift. But no slight examination satisfied her feminine curiosity. In turning over a dish she discovered on the under side a portrait of Henry Clay. Every piece was thus marked. To tease her husband she asked him the cause of his "sudden change of politics."

"Change of politics?" shouted the husband, as excited as if he had been charged with a crime. "What do you mean?"

Thereupon she showed him the portrait on the china. As if he were stung himself of a noxious thing, the farmer gathered up every dish and, carrying them to the door, broke them into fragments on the stone steps. He purchased another set of dishes in a few days, but not until he had made sure that there was no Whig politician's portrait on them.

"PASSING OF THE THIRD FLOOR BACK."

Ian Robertson, strangely enough, first introduced "The Private Secretary" to American playgoers, being anticipated in London by Beethoven Tree, who also played Ian Robertson's part there in Maurice Barrymore's "Mad Jack." With Edwin Booth he played the grave-digger in "Hamlet," and the King in "Richard III." to the great actor's delight, while Modjeska has left on record her keen appreciation of Ian Robertson's powers as an actor and producer alike.

Assuredly no more fitting representative could be found for his famous brother in towns that he cannot visit than Ian Robertson, who bears a striking resemblance in face, voice, manner and temperament, with an individuality of his own, while his beautiful and intellectual embodiment of "The Stranger" in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," has elicited the warmest praise from the press and public in England, as will no doubt be the case in this country. He will be supported by an entirely English company, who have come over with him to play here.

Mr. Ian Robertson, in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," will be seen at the Soisson Theatre, Thursday, November 14.

The Spring Maid, which comes to the Soisson Theatre, matinee and night, Saturday, November 16, will be presented by Werba and Luescher with the same organization seen last season. Gene Lunska and J. H. Goldworthy are again the "Princess Bosona" and "Prince Aladar" of the dainty operetta. Estelle Fox, sings the role of the pretty "Annamie" and Arthur Hyde makes love to her as "Baron Rudi." Harry Short, the serio-comic tragedian "Reinold" plays that quaint role with uncanny effect. It is said, and is assisted by Arthur Wexley as the "plough" and Ethel Vinney as the
